Comments

- My child enjoyed the different activities and it was fun to do things together like the drawing and the Fairtrade section. It made a change from the drudgery of the usual homework tasks.
- My child really seemed to enjoy having different tasks and colouring in once done.
- It felt less pressured and he enjoyed being able to pick.
- She enjoyed it but she was less organised than usual.
- There seemed to be more topics to do which kept his attention more.
- My son is never hugely motivated about homework but talking about it and looking at the wall did help. I/we as a family enjoyed this way of doing homework.
- Loved the variety. I would like to see more maths puzzles or science, e.g. make a paper plan or something CDT as boys can often think these are girl activities which they are not given engineering and ICT skills.

Any further comments:

- I think it was just as fun as other homework.
- More motivating for my child
- It would be good to do it again. My child would like a spelling activity.
- My son says that he loved it much more.
- We really enjoyed this format. Would appreciate more activities if possible.
- I preferred it. My child less so.
- Please include spelling in future activities.
- I felt that Rachel was more motivated and keen to do her homework if it was given out weekly.
- As a parent, I thought the diary exercise was excellent – both my 5 year old and 8 year old got involved with this part of the homework and encouraged more writing without it being a huge chore.
- Is it better than sticking with the previous format of spelling, numbers etc. There was more choice which kept his attention. It was good picking from sections.
- I still like to see what spelling words are being learned so we can use in everyday settings or stories. Loved the art work but would like to see something like draw in 3D, black & white, depth, distance, scale etc over just drawing an object. Maybe study one topic in “depth” in maths, art and design and English to understand it as a rounded topic! Great work!
